WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A few lingering rain showers are possible in far NW CA this morning as a cold front moves through the Pacific NW. Today will be another mild and dry day elsewhere across the region, with variable amounts of high clouds passing overhead. High pressure just west of California will push that system off to the east later today and skies will gradually clear. Dry and warmer conditions will follow Wednesday through the weekend and into next week. Although, the latest model run shows another system passing to our north on Thursday that could spread a few very light showers into far northern CA again.

N-NE surface winds will gust to 20-25 mph in the typical areas from the western Cascade-Sierra slopes to the coastal mountains early Wednesday and again on Friday, and gusts will increase to 30 mph or so during the weekend as the high pressure strengthens. In general, other than the light rain showers in far NW CA this morning and in the far north Thursday, the next 1-2 weeks will be dry throughout the North Ops region with occasional dry and gusty N-NE winds.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A strong ridge of high pressure centered off the California Coast will bring very warm and dry conditions away from the coastal areas and San Joaquin Valley through early next week. Maximum temperatures will be 10 to 15 degrees above normal, with 60s to low 70s across the mountains and San Joaquin Valley and mid 70s to mid 80s in the coastal valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits and teens away from the coast and San Joaquin Valley. Winds will be light, except there will be local northeast to east winds of 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35 mph over the mountains and below the canyons and passes of the region Saturday morning.
